

Jenny Suckale, Harvard University

22 February 2005

Jenny Suckale is a postgraduate student in the Master of Public Administration Program at the Kennedy School of Government. Her main interests are quantitative methods in political decision-making and international development. Prior to coming to Harvard, she worked with the GeoForschungsZentrum Potsdam and the South Pacific Applied Geoscience Commission in a Catastrophe Management Project, focusing on Seismic Hazard Assessment, Community Vulnerability and Risk Mitigation. Prior professional experience includes working for UNESCO in both Germany and South Africa. Suckale holds a degree in Physics (MSc) from the Free University in Berlin and participated in the Postgraduate Program for International Affairs 2002/2003.